Dear Dr. Pell

There should not be a double standard for this project, below that of projects in the United States. As you know, the power will be exported to the United States.

This permit should not be given until the proponents of the project have given adequate study of the environmental impacts of this massive wind energy project, and until they can show that they are in compliance with the appropriate environmental laws in the US and Mexico.

The project is currently in court. No permits should be issued at the very least until it is demonstrated that this project is in compliance with Mexican law, and that the energy produced meets the California Renewable Energy Portfolio Standards.

Thank you for your attention to this matter.
